Website Content

The ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity prepares and maintains the content of this website with the greatest possible care. Nevertheless, no guarantee can be given regarding the timeliness, accuracy, completeness or continuous availability of the information provided.

The published content is intended to provide information, contribute to scientific inquiry and promote public and societal discourse. It does not replace individual legal, medical, therapeutic or other professional advice.

The ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity reserves the right to modify, supplement or remove content or individual parts of this website at any time without prior notice, or to temporarily or permanently discontinue their publication.

Liability for damages arising directly or indirectly from the use or non-use of the information provided is governed by the applicable statutory provisions.

External Links

This website may contain references and links to third-party websites. The ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity has no control over their content or future development. At the time a link is created, external content is reviewed for identifiable legal violations. However, continuous monitoring of linked websites without specific indications of a legal violation is not possible.

The respective provider or operator of an external website is solely responsible for its content. If the ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity becomes aware of a specific legal violation on a linked website, the relevant link will be reviewed and removed where appropriate.

The inclusion of a link does not mean that the ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity adopts or endorses all statements, assessments or positions expressed on the linked website.

Scientific and Societal Content

Articles, analyses, statements, essays and other publications of the ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity are intended to contribute to scientific, societal and public discourse on the respective subjects addressed.

Unless expressly stated otherwise, assessments and conclusions contained in such publications reflect the state of knowledge and analysis at the time of publication. New findings, changing circumstances or continuing scientific and societal discourse may subsequently lead to additions, clarification or reassessment.

The publication of an analysis or position does not exclude differing views. The ICD understands scientific and societal discourse as an open process in which statements can be examined, questioned and further developed in light of new findings.

Copyright and Trademark Rights

The ICD – Institute for Communication & Dignity respects the copyright, trademark and other intellectual property rights of third parties when creating and publishing its content. Where third-party content, images, graphics, audiovisual media or other works are used, the respective rights remain with their rights holders.

The mere mention of trademarks, product names, organisations or other protected designations does not imply that they are free from third-party rights.
